Zero Dark Thirty is a work of fiction that depicts graphic acts of torture. The movie's implication that the use of torture produced critical intelligence is inaccurate. In particular, the clues that were essential to the hunt for Osama bin Laden were obtained through humane methods. Torture, in fact, produced false leads that wasted valuable staff time.

Take just 20 minutes to learn the facts about torture.

JUST THE FACTS

Zero Dark Thirty is a work of fiction that creates the false impression that torture produced critical intelligence. In December 2012, the Senate Intelligence Committee approved with a bipartisan vote a 6,000-page report on the results of a three-year investigation into the CIA torture program. This report contains the facts about torture.

Here is what senators who are privy to the report said:

"[The] CIA did not first learn about the existence of the [Osama bin Laden] courier from detainees subjected to coercive interrogation techniques. Nor did the agency discover the courier's identity from detainees subjected to coercive techniques."

- Joint statement from: Senator Dianne Feinstein (D-CA),
Chairman, Senate Intelligence Committee, and Senator Carl
Levin (D-MI) Chairman, Senate Armed Services Committee

"It was not torture or cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment of detainees that got us the major leads that ultimately enabled our intelligence community to find Osama bin Laden."

- Senator John McCain (R-AZ)

And Leon Panetta, Secretary of Defense and former CIA Director, had this to say:

"In the end, no detainee in CIA custody revealed the facilitator/courier's full true name or specific whereabouts. This information was discovered through other intelligence means."
